A PLACE IN GOLF HISTORY

The U.S. Women’s Open is returning to California after more than 30 years.

SAN MARTIN, CALIFORNIA: Rosewood CordeValle is located on 1,700 acres of rolling foothills of the Santa Cruz Mountains. It features 45 luxurious accommodations, a Sense spa, three distinct restaurants, four plexi-cushion tennis courts, meeting space, and an on-site working vineyard and winery. Its Robert Trent Jones Jr. golf course, host to the PGA TOUR’s Frys.com Open for four years, has unobstructed views of Northern California’s hillsides, canyons, and meadows.

The resort’s list of accolades is impressive. Golfweek rates the course No. 4 in California, and Golf Digest ranks it No. 44 in the country. Its spa received a Forbes Four-Star Award and U.S. News considers it No. 10 on its list of Best Hotels in California.

A place in golf history awaits the resort in July when the world turns its attention to CordeValle for the U.S. Women’s Open. “Northern California has produced two of today’s most accomplished female players in Women’s Open champions, Paula Creamer and Juli Inkster, and we look forward to bringing this championship to such a vibrant golf community,” said Thomas J. O’Toole Jr., chairman of the Championship Committee. ■

Traveling to CordeValle: The resort is 60 minutes from the San Francisco airport (SFO), a 45-minute drive from Pebble Beach, and 35 minutes from San Jose.

CordeValle’s Ultimate Golf Package includes one night in a luxurious bungalow, one round of golf with cart, and a continental breakfast. Rates start at $495/night for a single and $640/night for a double.

For more information about CordeValle and its tournaments, phone (408) 695-4500 or visit CordeValleGolf.com.
