Staying Ahead of the Curve

“By any measure, The Landings Club has been a success since day one.”

OUTSIDE SAVANNAH, GEORGIA: During its first four decades of existence (1926-1968), the PGA TOUR operated under the wings of The PGA of America. With expanded television coverage and revenue in the late 1960s, the organization faced a crossroads. Tour players wanted larger purses, while the PGA desired to have the money directed to a general fund targeting grow-the-game initiatives. Today, the two organizations operate as separate entities.

Another noteworthy development in golf during the era was the pairing of a private club membership with a real estate purchase—creating a golf community. One of the first, and to this day the best, is The Landings Club with six private golf courses and Georgia’s only Audubon International certified sustainable community.

“We hold the ‘pole position’ among golf communities,” explained Steven Freund, executive director at The Landings Club. “Our membership is intent on holding that advantage. Continual investments allow us to provide the best amenities at what most would find a reasonable price point. Since developer turnover, $50 million has been allocated for capital projects.”

Currently, The Landings Club is at the midpoint in a three phase $25 million expansion project. “It’s exciting!

In the next couple of months our new Franklin Creek Sports Campus and 52,000 square-foot Wellness Center will hold its grand opening. Soon afterward, we will raze the Marshwood Clubhouse and start construction on what will be a ‘best in class’ facility,” said Freund.

OUR CORNERSTONE AMENITY

The Landings Club is annual host to a Web.com Tour tournament—the Savannah Golf Championship. The Web.com Tour is the official path to the PGA TOUR and awards 50 PGA TOUR cards each season, following Web.com Tour Championship. “This year was our first of a five-year commitment with the PGA TOUR,” said Freund. “As I expected, reviews were glowing. But, what really brought a tear to my eye was the number of member volunteers, over 500 in total, helping to support the cause.

“We never lose sight that golf is our core amenity,” concluded Freund. “Six courses provide the bandwidth to supply ample tee time access while closing one course each summer for major maintenance. Unlike other golf communities that wait for issues to arise, we stay ahead of the curve, guaranteeing quality conditioning.” ■
