an extraordinary setting to enjoy an ideal life

SANTA FE, NEW MEXICO: The town is the oldest capital city in North America and the site of the oldest public building in America.

"I would also consider Santa Fe to be the culinary capital of the Southwest," lauded Jake Judd, CEC, executive chef at Las Campanas. "Our region has a well-deserved reputation for blending traditional New Mexican flavors with cutting edge culinary approaches.

"Each week, I shop the downtown Farmers Market where 100 percent of the vegetables and fruits are sold by 150 local ranchers and farmers," continued Chef Jake. "The aroma of smoked chile peppers in the air stirs your appetite and makes your senses come alive."

ULTIMATE PRIVACY

Las Campanas features two Jack Nicklaus Signature golf courses, an inviting hacienda clubhouse, a tennis pavilion, an industry leading fitness center with indoor/outdoor swimming pools, and a highly acclaimed equestrian program with room to board 80 horses.

"My two courses are an unbelievably fun golfing experience," praised Jack Nicklaus. "Las Campanas is very different from other private clubs in the Southwest. The community offers a well-rounded lifestyle beyond golf with family and fitness at the forefront."

"This will be my second season at Las Campanas," said Chef Jake. "Nature is a big deal to my family. The area has earned widespread acclaim for its stellar arts and architecture, but it's equally notable for being an outdoor mecca, including quality skiing only 45 minutes away.

"Las Campanas is grand in scale and provides ultimate privacy. Unlike most private golf communities where homes line both sides of the street, it's not uncommon for residences to be spaced up to a half-mile apart. Even our on-site dog park provides ample room to run," smiled Chef Jake. ■

The two Jack Nicklaus Signature golf courses are ranked No.1 and No.3 in the state by Golf Digest
