PALM BEACH GARDENS, FLORIDA: As Jeff Fitzherbert celebrated his silver anniversary (25 years) at BallenIsles, he reflected on what has changed and remained the same in the golf industry. "When I started in the golf shop at BallenIsles, the Callaway Big Bertha was all the rage," recalled Fitzherbert, director of golf operations. "The driver, made from titanium, seemed enormous compared to wooden drivers that had been the mainstay for generations. It's hard to believe that today's most popular drivers are more than double the size of the original Big Bertha and made from complex multi-metal designs!"

BallenIsles has long been where champions play. The secure, member-owned club and community hosted the 1971 PGA Championship (won by Jack Nicklaus) and has the distinguished record of hosting nine PGA Senior Championships, five of which were won by Sam Snead.

"We have been a 1971 PGA TOUR qualifying school that produced an outstanding crop of players, including Lanny Wadkins, Tom Watson, and Bruce Fleisher, BallenIsles resident and 19-time PGA TOUR Champion," said Fitzherbert.

MODERN BY ANY MEASURE

BallenIsles recently opened its luxurious, 115,000 square-foot clubhouse that's more than twice the size of the White House in Washington, D.C. Other notable amenities include a 62,000 stand-alone sports complex, six dining facilities, the Cosmo & Company Spa, a resort-style pool, and state-of-the-art fitness and tennis facilities that were ranked No.1 in the country by the USTA (with 22 courts including pickleball and a 500-seat stadium venue).

"We have been careful to preserve our heritage as one of South Florida's premier golf facilities," proudly reported Fitzherbert. "Over the past decade, more than $75 million in expansions and enhancements have been completed, including capital earmarked for our three golf courses. In recent years, we have renovated our East and North courses and later this spring, we are slated to begin a renovation of our South Golf Course by legendary architect Rees Jones." ■
