“THE GOLF in Southern Arizona is different than anywhere else in the country. Manicured fairways against the rugged beauty of the mountains makes it an inspiring experience.”

MARANA, ARIZONA (North of Tucson): Although Scottsdale and Tucson are only separated by about 100 miles, they offer very different lifestyles. Tucson feels like a Midwestern town, while Scottsdale has the ambiance of a conservative Los Angeles.

“When prospective members compare us to the top private clubs in Phoenix/Scottsdale, I like to highlight our lack of traffic and a climate that is typically 10 degrees cooler. I refer to greater Tucson as a big little city,” said Eric Lyman, director of membership at The Gallery Golf Club.

HIGH DESERT LIVING

“Membership provides access to 36 holes of private golf as well as 27 holes of additional championship golf,” continued Lyman. “Vegetation surrounding The Gallery is thick with saguaro cacti and many holes feature views of downtown Tucson and the Tortolita Mountains. During sunset, the hillsides light up in a deep maroon red and, at first glance, look as though they are on fire. The scenery is worthy of a photo shoot for an art exhibit.”

The Gallery is a past host of the WGC (World Golf Match Play Championships). “Our North Course, a ‘Top-100 Modern Course’ by Golfweek, welcomes you with wide fairways and subtle elevation changes that are balanced with strategic bunkering for those who are too assertive or aggressive,” described Jon Morgan, director of golf. “Our South Course is more forgiving off the tee, but it’s the green complexes that keep you honest.”

“The club recently completed $3 million in facility improvements,” said a pleased Lyman. “I like to think of The Gallery as the Desert Southwest’s version of the Garden of Eden.” ■
