Water Views from Every Hole

Pamper yourself by the sea while experiencing island living.

HUTCHINSON ISLAND, FLORIDA: The Plaza is the only hotel in New York City to be designated a National Historic Landmark. During a $600 million renovation, overseen by Shane Krige, attention to detail was a given.

"We were fortunate to hire Shane as our community's COO/GM. His laser focus on service and level of scrutiny of the little things is a perfect match at Sailfish Point," expressed Martin Conroy, director of real estate. "He has a presence in the room that signals he's the right guy for us."

Sailfish Point is bordered by the Atlantic Ocean on the east and the Indian River on the west, creating a location with a foursome of amenities: beach, golf, tennis, and boating. "Yachtsmen will relish our full-service, 84-slip marina that can accommodate vessels up to 100 feet in length. Direct water access allows you to reach the Atlantic Ocean in 10 minutes, and we are only 59 miles from the Bahamas," explained Conroy.

Islands of waving palms and lush foliage float on undulating fairways, greeting you on the Jack Nicklaus Signature Course. "The 18th green at Sailfish Point was dubbed 'window to the sea' by The Golden Bear for its boundless views of the ocean," continued Conroy. "Don't be surprised after holing out, if you are tempted to linger."

THROWBACK TO OLDE FLORIDA

The state is perennially one of the fastest-growing and strongest economies in the country. "Florida is ever-increasing in popularity, especially for those families in the highest income bracket," said Conroy. "Since Sailfish Point is on a peninsula surrounded by water, natural barriers keep the area from unchecked building. In some ways, the Treasure Coast is a throwback to South Florida from decades ago. While Stuart/Port Saint Lucie may not have the art scene of Palm Beach, we also don't have the same traffic and construction delays plaguing Miami, Naples, and Orlando." ■

The Treasure Coast was named a past recipient as "America's Happiest Seaside Town" by Coastal Living.
