Personal trainers are available to help you accomplish your wellness goals.

The Pete Dye Course features small, undulating greens that are well protected by pot bunkers.

OFF HILTON HEAD ISLAND, SOUTH CAROLINA: Colleton River Club is a community shaped less by amenities and more by purpose. While championship golf, elevated dining, and thoughtful wellness offerings set a high standard, they are not the reason members stay. The true differentiator is the culture itself: a place where relationships form naturally, experiences feel personal, and daily life brings people together.

“Great communities do not happen by accident,” said Robert Sereci, CEO of Colleton River Club. “They are built through thousands of small, deliberate choices. How people are welcomed. How events are designed. How staff are encouraged to take ownership of the member experience. Amenities matter, but culture determines whether a place feels impressive or truly livable.”

That philosophy is evident throughout the community. “Our quality extends far beyond superior course conditioning on our Dye and Nicklaus courses,” continued Sereci. “Our culinary offerings and personalized service are best in class, but where we truly shine is in the social fabric created through our events.”

Almost all gatherings at Colleton River share three essential elements: community, offering opportunities to connect with like-minded individuals; belonging, fostered through familiar faces, recurring events, and a flow of life that encourages participation; and a calendar that balances dinners, mixers, and holiday celebrations. “Connections here run deep,” Sereci added. “Residents who move away often miss their neighbors more than the facilities.

“At Colleton River, golf, wellness, dining, and social life reinforce one another,” he said. “That balance leads to greater fulfillment.” ■

Colleton River Club, known as the land between two rivers, is surrounded by water on three sides and bordered by a 1,100-acre nature preserve. Members have access to the Intracoastal Waterway and the Atlantic Ocean.

The community dock offers fresh sea air, dolphins frolicking in your boat's wake, and sunsets worth lingering over.
