

PGA NATIONAL RESORT

Thoughtfully Reimagined

PALM BEACH GARDENS, FLORIDA: Steeped in golf history, PGA National Resort is home to some of golf's most celebrated events, including the Ryder Cup (1983), PGA Championship (1987), Senior PGA Championship, and has hosted an annual PGA TOUR event since 1997.

With five golf courses to choose from, variety is the spice of life. The Champion Course (designed by Jack Nicklaus) is host to the Cognizant Classic. You may have seen some of the best players on Tour challenge themselves on holes 15, 16, and 17, also known as the Bear Trap, considered one of the toughest stretches in golf, on NBC or The Golf Channel earlier this year.

"During tournament week, we welcome the PGA TOUR to the fullest extent," revealed Patrick O'Malley, club general manager. "The nice part of running a facility with so many golf options is that you always have a course to play. They each present a different challenge and aspect of the game that players from beginner to pro can enjoy. The tournament is a great moment for us to shine on a worldwide stage and show what we have to offer."

Last year, Henderson Park purchased PGA National Resort with the intent to increase its awareness among golfers. "When I saw the master plan they envisioned, I said, 'I'm in.' One of the first management improvements implemented was unifying departments and increasing communication.

"If you ask avid golfers to name their ten bucket list destinations to play, often we aren't a part of the conversation," said O'Malley. "We are intent on changing that. We have the facilities, history, location, and climate that many other resorts can't match. As the original home of the PGA of America, golf is in our DNA. Henderson Park has green-lighted many renovations, enhancing our facilities and enriching the experience for our members and guests." ■

"WE'RE EXCITED to be stewards of PGA National Resort, historically one of the most dynamic golf destinations in America. Our plans include further enhancement of its facilities while enriching the experience provided to our members and guests."
